NATIONAL LIBRARY WEEK April 21-27, 1963

These dates marked the sixth year of a program that has been effective in asserting the fact that "a better-read American is A better-informed America." This movement was dedicated to the encouragement of life time reading habits and to the use of library services and the improvement of library resources.

National Library Week was a good time for us to evaluate the library services in our schools and communities, to notice the role that reading plays in our national life, in business, industry and culture. It was a time for us to reaffirm our faith in education through reading; pleasure through reading; and a larger greater world for the individual and the masses through the services of the library.

The theme for this year is "The Fifth Freedom—Enjoy It!" We enjoy the other four freedoms, so why not a fifth?

National Library week was sponsored by the National Book Committee, Inc., in cooperation with the American Library Association. More than sixty national organizations of all kinds participated actively in this program.

The National Book Committee Inc. is an independent, nonprofit, educational organization of outstanding citizens from many fields of endeavor. It was founded in 1954 to serve the public's interest in books and its social, cultural, and economical stake in our development as a reading nation.

While you're reading these fourlines, the U. S. government will have spent $110,000—if you're a fast reader.

COMEBACK

A father was berating his son who was fooling around instead of doing his homework.

"When Abraham Lincoln was your age," the father lectured, "he walked ten miles to school every day and then studied by the light of the fire in his log cabin."

"So what?" the son replied, "When John Kennedy was your age he was president."

DEFINITION

WILL POWER: Having the same ailment somebody is describing to you but not mentioning it.

WHAT IS A TEENAGER?

A teenager is a problem to his parents, a trial to his teachers, and speaks a language intelligible only to his contemporaries. He is more concerned about making history than studying it.

A teenager can be bursting with energy one minute and can be hopelessly lazy the next. Mom may never get a word out of her about tonight's date, but she can talk to a girl friend for hours on the telephone and say almost nothing.

A teenager likes cars, girls, boys, food, fun, records, vacations, Saturdays, football, lunch periods, weird jokes, going places (anywhere), and wearing sharp clothes.

A teenager dislikes: Studying, hunger, silence, coming home early, squares, rules, people who don't like for teenagers to go steady, losing at sports, doing what the "crowd" isn't doing, and being nagged by parents and teachers.

BUT ABOVE ALL! A teenager is tomorrow. Tomorrow walking around TODAY in dirty bucks or a pony tail. Today's teenager is tomorrow's mayor, police chief, doctor, nurse, criminal, minister, lawyer, teacher, income tax cheat, and town loafer.

A teenager is a set of adolescent emotions operating in an adult body. He can bring more joy or sorrow, more discouragement or pride than anyone else and with hardly any time between. Teenagers are almost never still, but they are still the greatest people in the world—just because they're teenagers—and because they are ours!

HOME EC. COTTAGE GETS FACELIFTING

A long-range dream became a reality as homemaking students worked and planned to make improvements in the homemaking department.

With the approval of Mr. Payne and the work of Dexter, our maintenance man, the cabinets in the kitchens were remodeled and paint-white. We selected black hardware for pulls and hinges. Due to the fact that the wallpaper was in need of replacement, it was removed and beautiful, clean panels of masonite were put in its place. The color we chose was glacier walnut. Since the surface is as smooth as glass, it wipes clean with a damp cloth, thus saving both time and energy in cleaning.

Red curtains to harmonize with the red cabinet top were selected for the windows. New appliances consisting of electric range, washer, dryer, and refrigerator were added which added beauty to our kitchens.

A new coat of paint covered up the floral design of the old wallpaper in the workroom. Lighter, brighter and better working conditions in our workroom make our work easier and also gives a home-like atmosphere.

The fireplace was painted with brown and red paint mixed to obtain our desired shade to match the new draperies and pictures which were added to the living room.

All this work that has been done in the homemaking cottage should not leave the impression that our studies have been neglected. The physical work was done in relation to the mental work and is another example of the fact that plans can be completed when students, teachers, administration and staff members all work together for constant improvement of our educational program.
